“Without God all things are permitted” —even infanticide!

A short while ago, a group of Greek feminists demanded that mothers be able to murder their newborn infants without any legal consequences!

Someone quite rightly made the following observations:

“We do not view as adventitious an announcement by Greek feminists promoting the legalization of infanticide.

“Such inhuman practices serve all too well the international campaign fueled by dark forces for a drastic reduction of the world’s population.

“The discouragement of childbearing, the promotion of homosexuality, and the safeguarding of abortion, together with the legalization of infanticide, constitute the barbarity of the supposedly civilized society of the twenty-first century!

“This is, in essence, a nightmarish resurrection of the barbarous pre-Christian past, in which parents regarded children as their property. In order to get rid of them, they either killed them without legal consequences or threw them into deserted places to become prey for wild beasts!

“The upshot of this savagery is that it highlights for the umpteenth time the grandeur of our Christian Faith, which alone has exalted mankind, every human person, as being in the image of God and as endowed with supreme value.

“It also has the effect of revealing where mankind is headed when it betrays the Gospel, as well as confirming the great Dostoevsky, who very correctly remarked that ‘without God all things are permitted,’ even the horror of infanticide!”
